

NOT BUILT.
GROWN.

Most intelligence is modeled on the human mind. Ours is modeled on nature's.

A NETWORK FOUR HUNDRED MILLION YEARS IN PRACTICE

01 — PROBLEM

Every company runs on three versions of the truth.

The CRM says one thing. The ERP says another. The inbox holds a third — and nobody reconciles them until a decision already shipped on the wrong one.

The tools don’t fail. They were simply never built to agree with each other, and no one owns the job of making them.

02 — PROPOSED SOLUTION

One truth, woven from every system you already run.

Piternet connects the CRM, the ERP, and the Workspace into a single, continuously-updated model of what is actually happening in the business — not a copy of the data, a working model of it.

Every new fact updates the whole picture automatically. Nothing needs to be told twice.

03 — PRODUCT DETAILS

It looks like many tools. It runs as one system.

A memory layer holds the working model of the business: who the customers are, what stage every deal is in, what is verified and what is only claimed.

A workforce of specialized agents reads that model and acts on it — drafting, flagging, deciding what is next. Nothing reaches a customer, a vendor, or a dollar without one human approval. That rule has no exception.

04 — BUSINESS MODEL

We sell the answer, not the dashboard.

The billable unit is not a seat or a report. It is an insight: one verified, sourced conclusion, ready to act on.

Onboarding is a two-week structured deployment, not a software install. Every account starts on a fixed base fee and expands automatically as the system earns more autonomy — measured client by client, never assumed.

05 — MARKET OPPORTUNITY

Every disconnected system is a future customer.

This is not a niche. Every company past a certain size runs on tools that were bought separately and never reconciled — and every one of them is now buying AI to close that gap.

The buyer is anyone who has ever said “let me check with the other system” before answering a question that should have had one answer already.

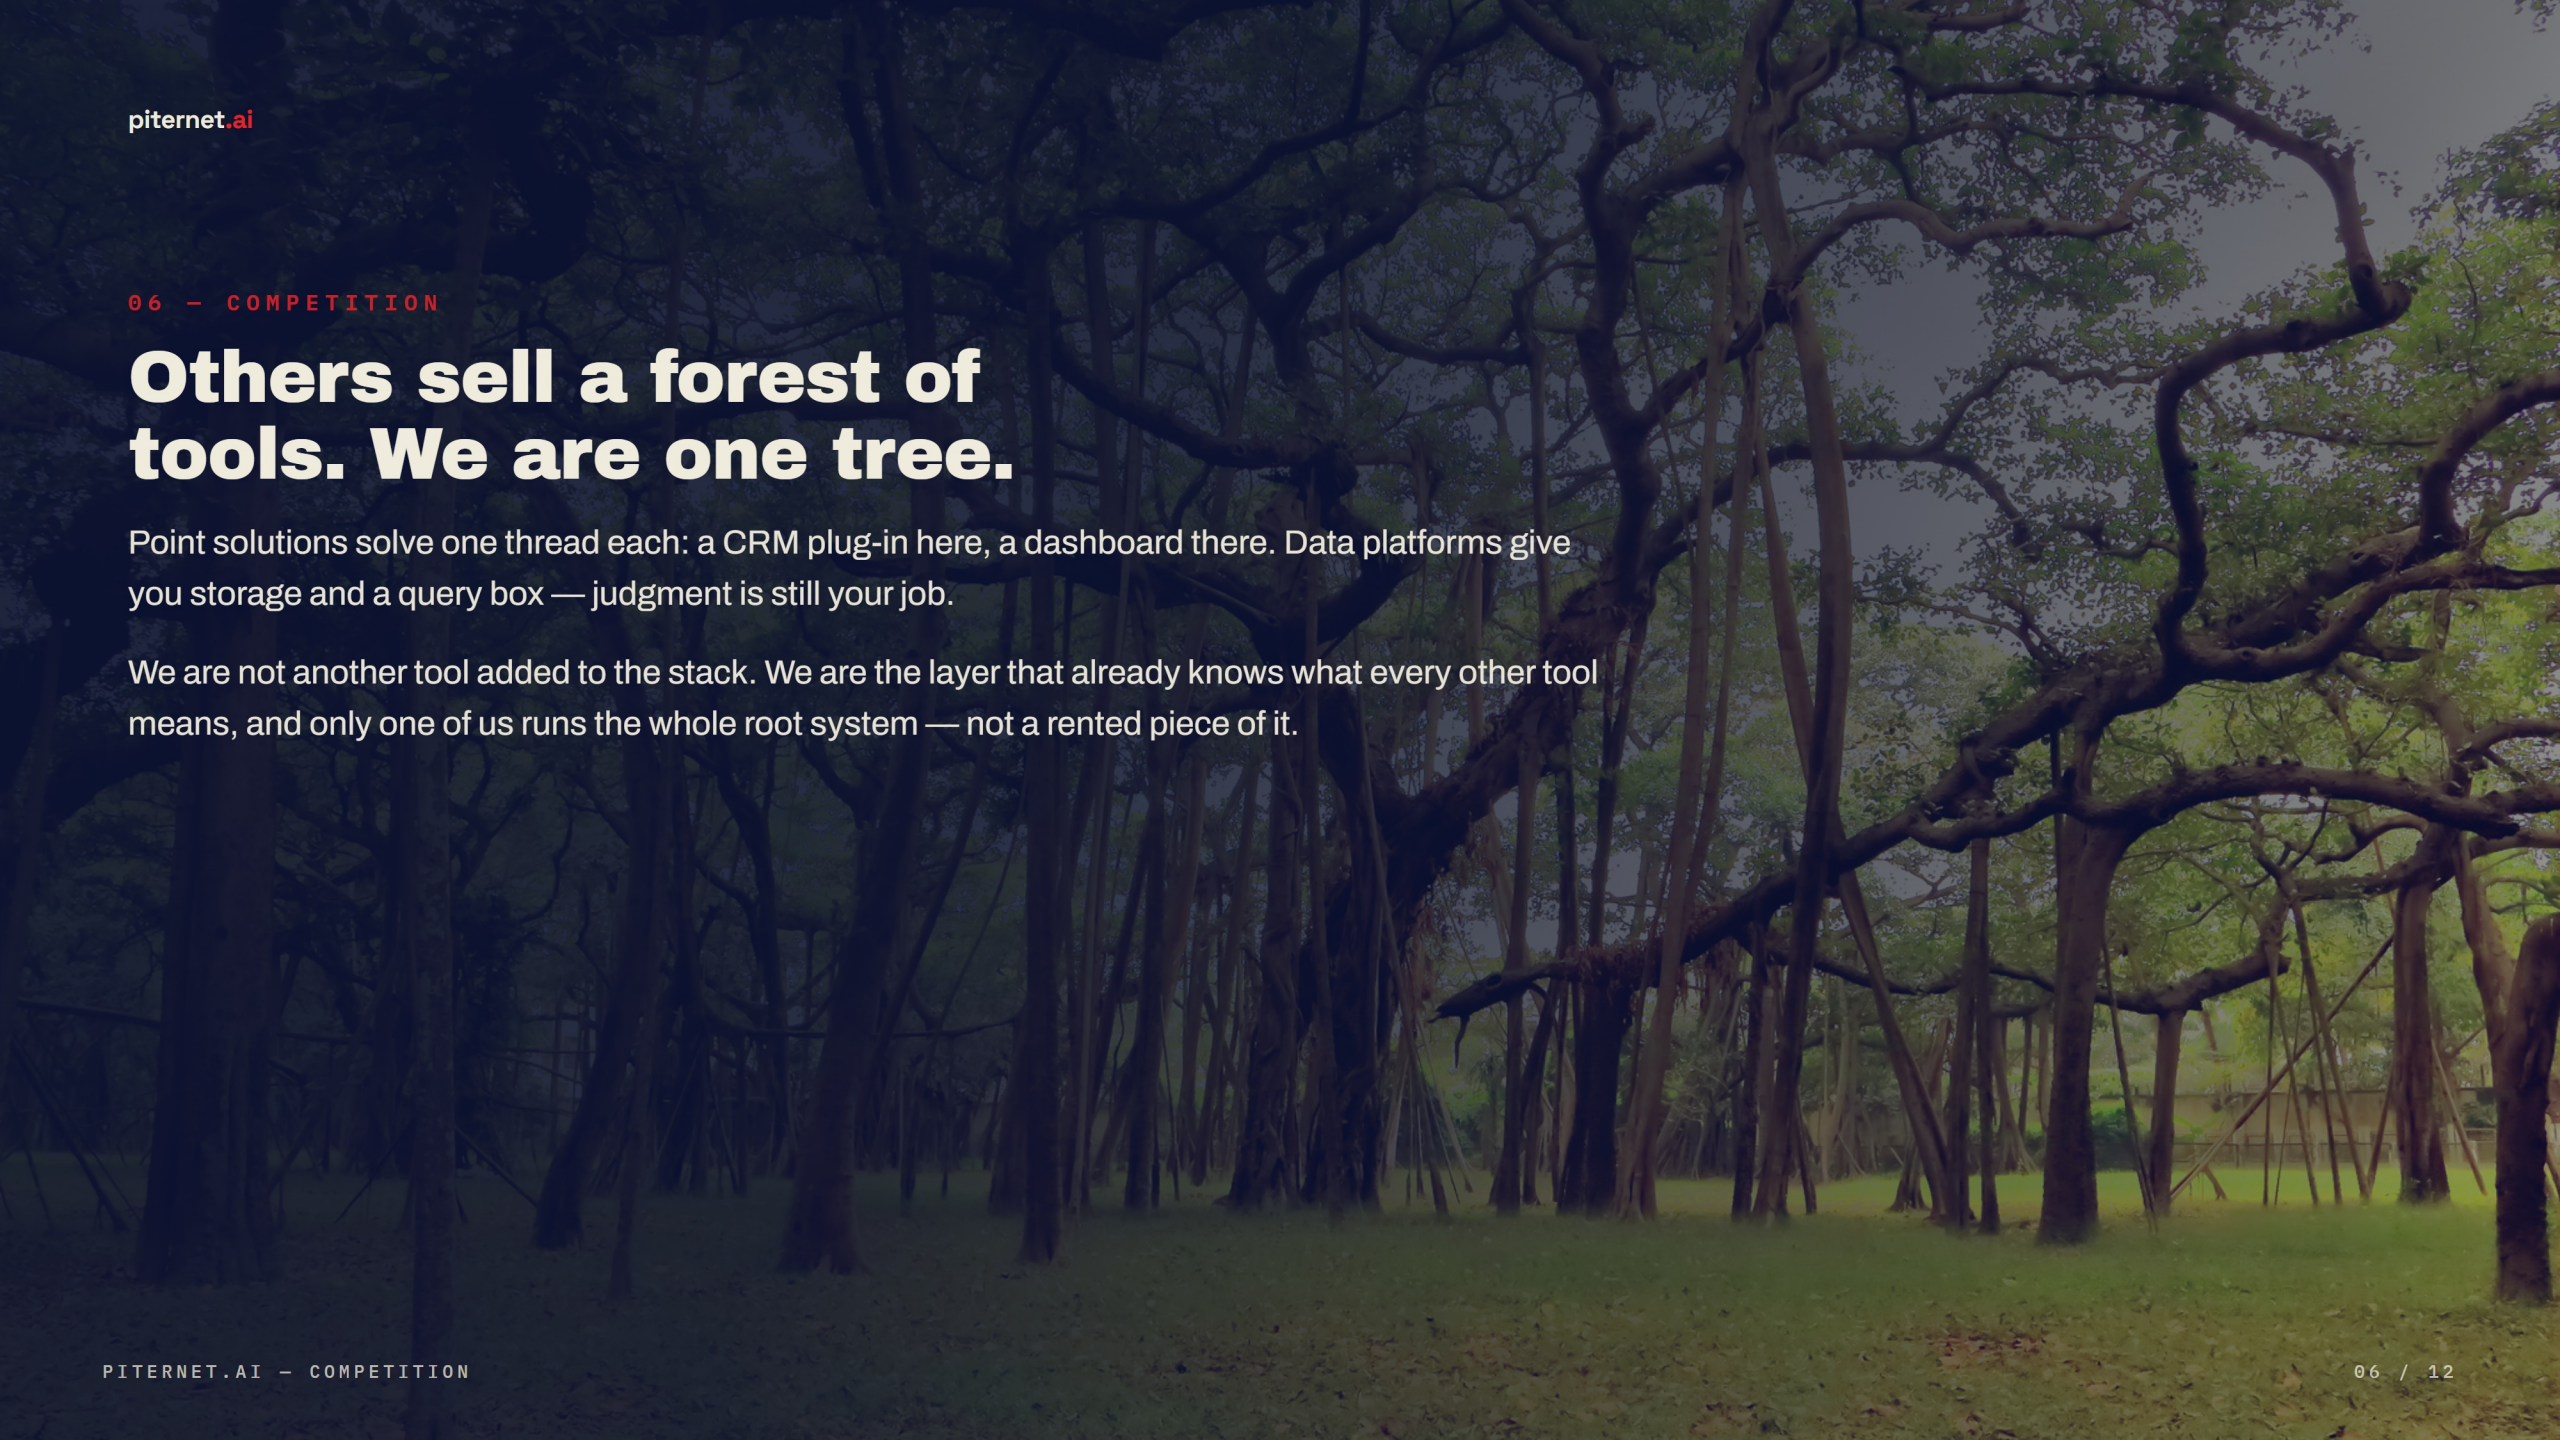

MARKET SIZING INTENTIONALLY LEFT OPEN — DROP IN TAM/SAM/SOM HERE ONCE SOURCED.

06 — COMPETITION

Others sell a forest of tools. We are one tree.

Point solutions solve one thread each: a CRM plug-in here, a dashboard there. Data platforms give you storage and a query box — judgment is still your job.

We are not another tool added to the stack. We are the layer that already knows what every other tool means, and only one of us runs the whole root system — not a rented piece of it.

07 — GROWTH STRATEGY

Land on one workflow. Expand only where it is earned.

We land inside a single team, on one high-friction workflow, and prove the model against real usage — never a demo environment.

Expansion is account by account, rung by rung on the same autonomy ladder the product itself climbs: L0 to L3, promoted by evidence. Growth is a measurement, not a sales pitch for more seats.

08 — CURRENT TRACTION

Small. Real. Already running.

The core system — the memory layer, the agent workforce, the human-approval gate — is not a mockup for this deck. It is roughly eighty-five percent built and operating today.

It already runs Estefano’s own commercial pipeline in production: triage, drafts, and follow-ups, every one of them behind the same one-approval rule the product sells.

09 — FINANCIALS

Built lean. No burn to justify yet.

Pre-revenue, by design. The founding team funded the build directly — no outside capital raised or spent.

Infrastructure cost today runs ten to fifteen dollars a month, cloud and model inference included, because the system is sized to the task instead of the biggest model available. Efficiency was a design constraint, not an accident.

10 — TEAM

Someone tends the forest

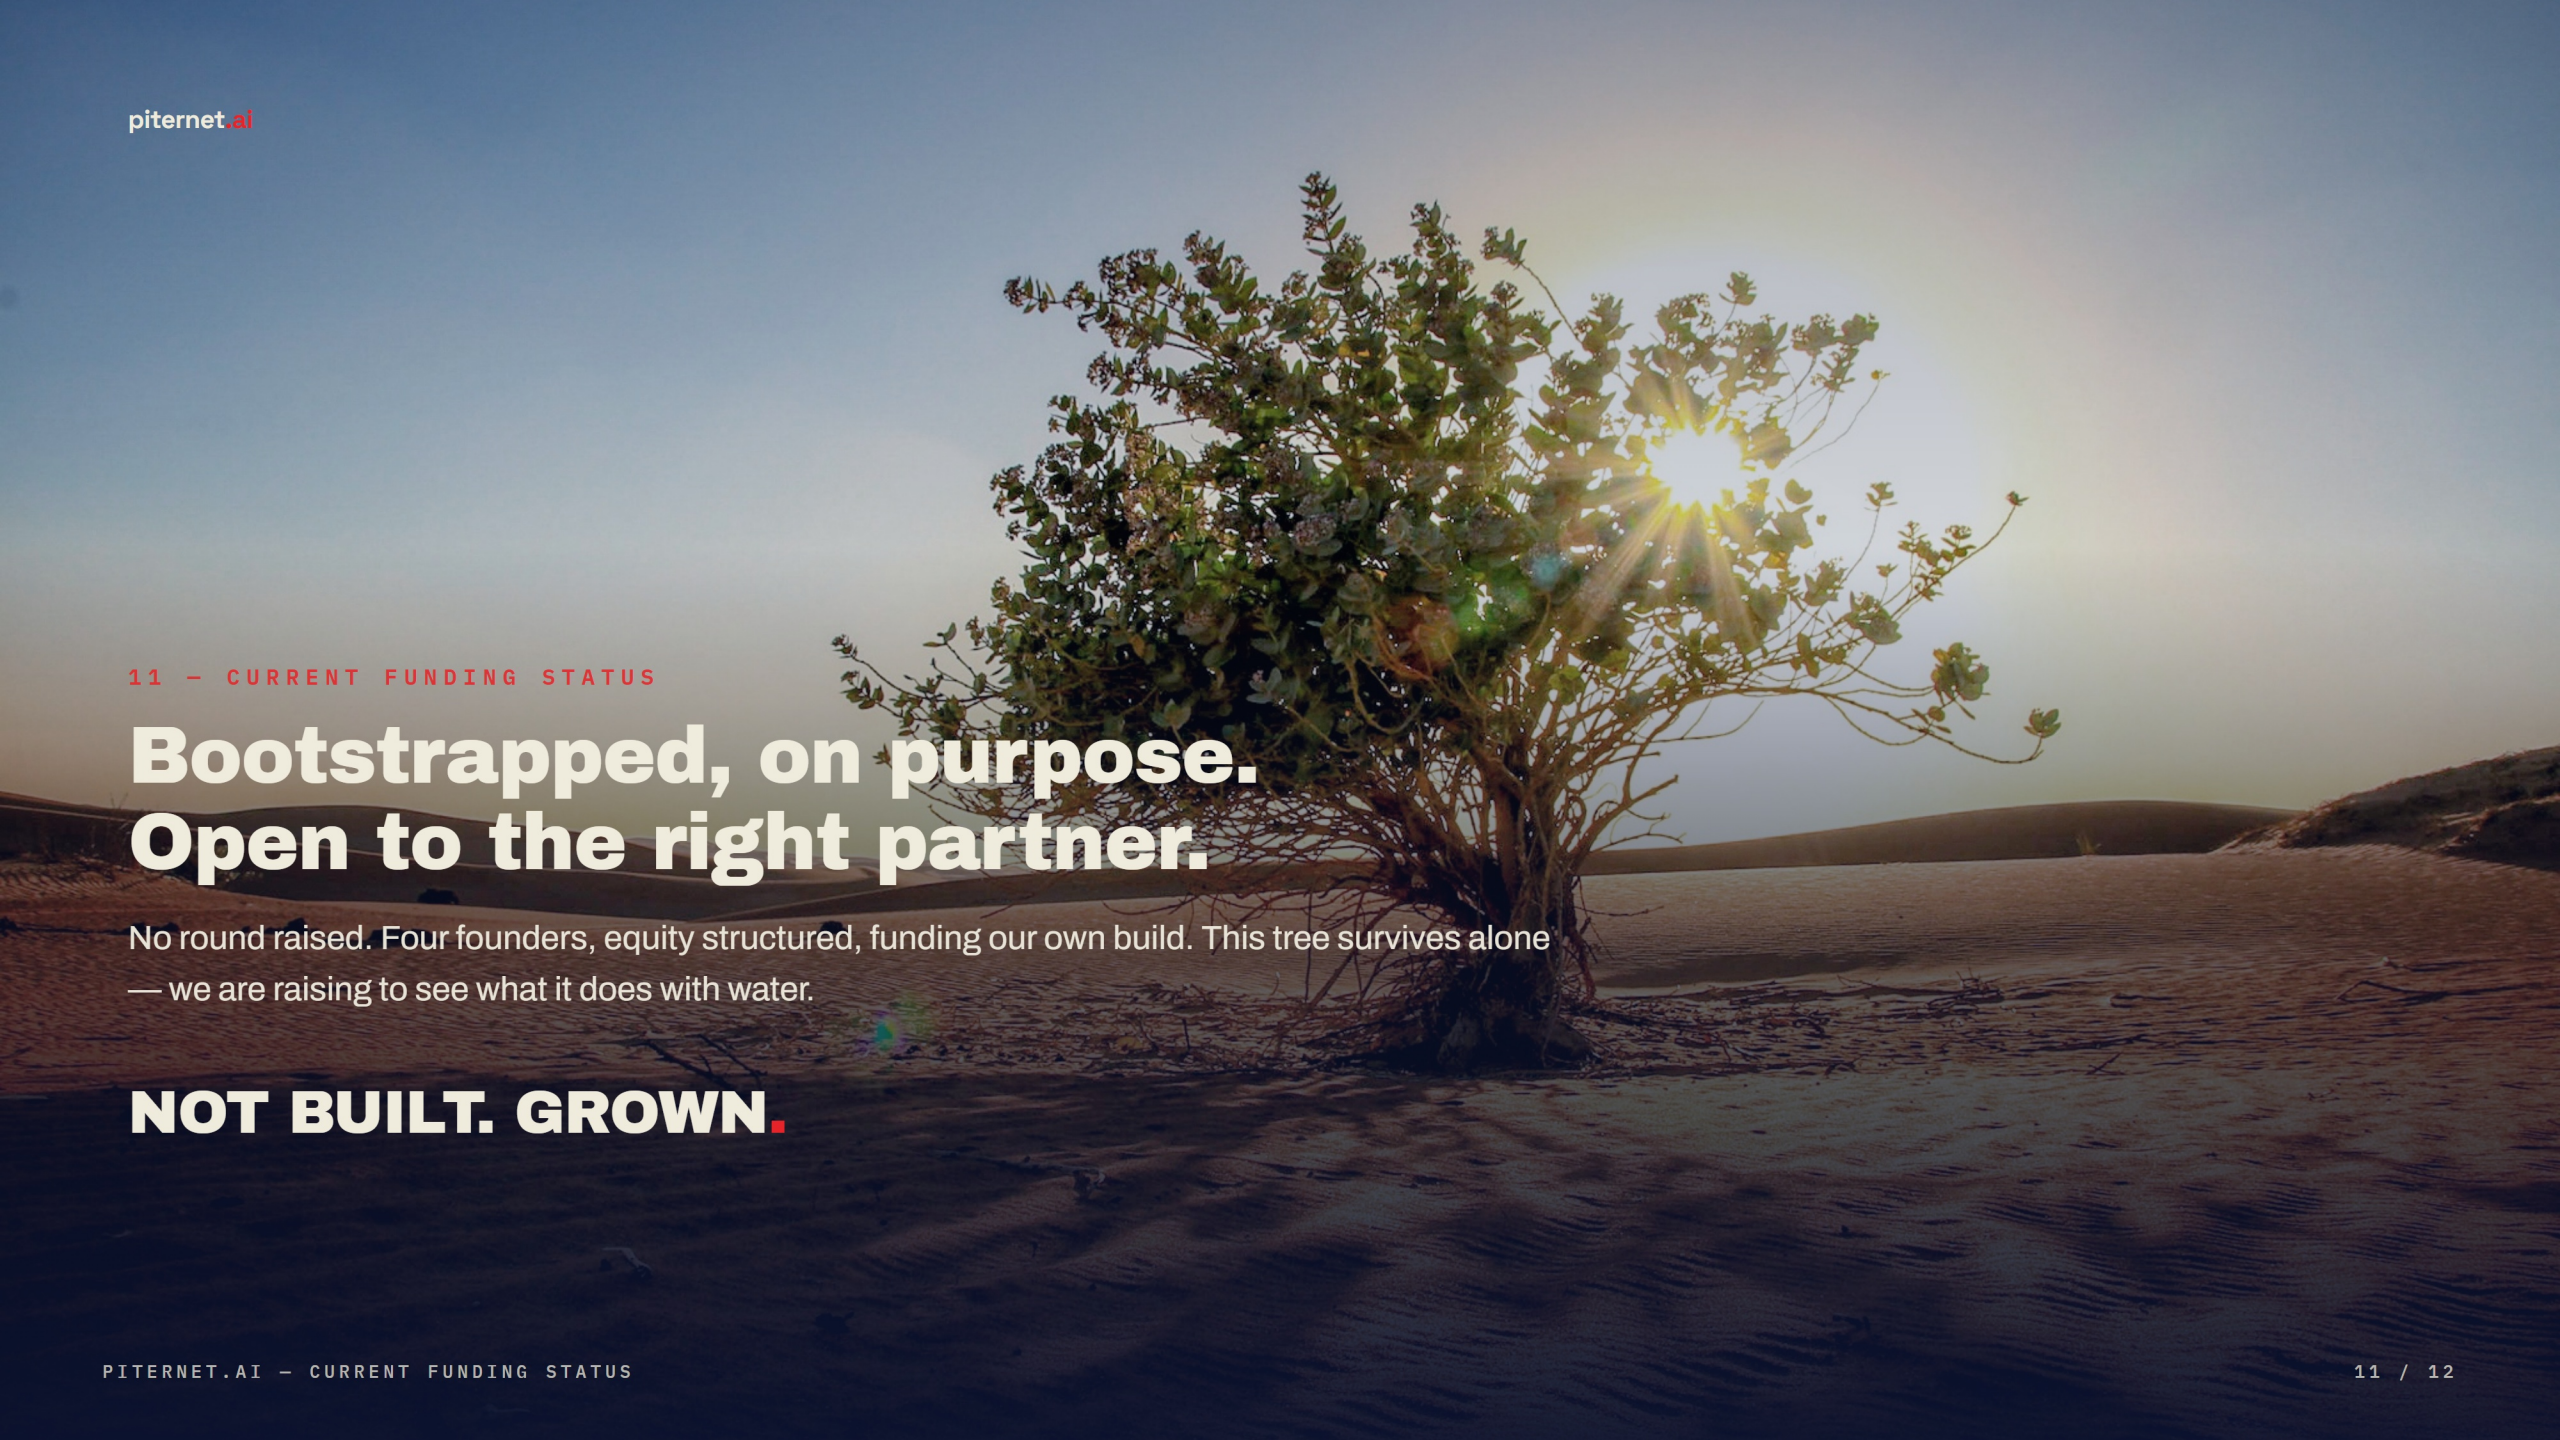

The oldest trees feed the smallest seedlings first. Foresters call them mother trees. Ours are four people, tending the same way.

11 — CURRENT FUNDING STATUS

Bootstrapped, on purpose. Open to the right partner.

No round raised. Four founders, equity structured, funding our own build. This tree survives alone — we are raising to see what it does with water.

NOT BUILT. GROWN.
